

Manhattan's Peak

manhattan real estate & the race card

i like this blog and the concept tremendously. and not just because it has a slight sexual innuendo thing going on about it all...

when i clicked on neighborhoods, then clicked on Wahi/Inwood, the video below was one of six listed:

interesting points in the video, and interesting choice to put the race video under our neighborhood.

maybe she just doesnt have any submissions from upper manhattan?

if that's the case, will someone with a video camera get on this immediately??

with all that said: there is not a doubt in my mind that if this woman were a minority, of any color, that people (both majorities and minorities) would be up in frigg'n arms about it.

but since she's white, it's probably okay.

i know i've gotten shit on this blog about calling people "gentrifiers" on this site without specifically "defining" it even though i consider myself one of them, sorta.

(and readers ASSuming gentrifier meant white because i mentioned some chick was white in a verbal scuffle and never mind that i mentioned the dude was dominican and none of the hispanics/latinos reading this blog even blinked an eye as far as i know)

and im sure those bloggers were upset because i said "white" only because im not white in skin color because i mentioned that im "puerto rican" from the very beginning, and my lover agreed - even though i dont speak a lick of spanish and have to pull out all recipes.com just to cook some rice and beans and assume this is what it tastes like in puerto rico because ive never been there and btw my lover, a jew, has a darker complexion than i do (trust me, this pisses me off to no end but it is what it is but at least our kids will be cute!)

it doesnt matter what you say, or dont say... in manhattan, race and real estate will always go hand in hand, and will, inevitably, be a big hullabaloo.

who wins when everyone loses?

you cant have diversity when people of lesser means are priced out of manhattan and forced to move to other boro's, or out of state.

[ /end rant ]

even better about this new blog is that it's this white chicks site and she can do whatever the hell she wants - and im glad she does, and does it well.

i admire ANYONE who has the courage to say how they REALLY feel about race, in manhattan especially, because people will turn on you really

fucking
quickly

dont think so? check out HER comments!!!! people mentioned ethnic cleansing for goshsakes!

view the video, then tell me what you think in the comments.

kudos to IntoTheBox.tv via metro